2 Wayne Toepp - St. Lucy Series

The St. Lucy paintings are a series of current works rendering optical structures from screen technologies in oil and Flashe paints on canvas. The series embraces the visual pleasure of the optical field. The optical patterns are hand painted using #2 flatbrushes and a T-square guide. The initial layers of vertical scan lines are painted in Flashe vinyl acrylic, and the color values and optical tuning of the painting are further adjusted and developed with subsequent layers of oil paint. The process is slow and methodical, developing the patterns in a right to left working process to avoid smearing the wet paint. The disconnect between the digital screen source image and the intense slow labor of the painting process is a central aspect of the work.
